Baroque Fulcrum

Cosmic indeterminacy vs.
contextual contingency.
Which wins?

The image of the shell thus reveals nothing short of an architectural edifice, a futuristic cathedral, or an ahistorical baroque expression, both familiar and unfamiliar in its curvature (Fig. 2). Except the former emerged in the seas of the Cambrian period 500 million years ago, while the latter occurred in 1600s Catholic Europe. The former relies on the geometry infused from deep cosmological time; the latter on the intricacies of Austrian or Italian mathematical calculations where a shift of one millimeter would make the whole interior falter.

We call it ahistorical because the problem of the inside and the outside far exceeds architectural or artistic time periods. On the other hand, one has to see specifically baroque problems exceeding their own contexts and times, and seeping into other historical and geologic periods, albeit in a different configuration.

This exceeding of the inside/outside problem also occurs on the level of feelings:

Perhaps that's what I feel, an outside and an inside and me in the middle, perhaps that's what I am, the thing that divides the world in two, on the one side the outside, on the other the inside, that can be as thin as foil, I'm neither one side nor the other, I'm in the middle, I'm the partition, I've two surfaces and no thickness, perhaps that's what I feel, myself vibrating, I'm the tympanum, on the one hand the mind, on the other the world, I don't belong to either.³

He is a bivalve that is a fulcrum, and then pure surfaces without thickness, then pure vibration, or an instrumental surface that reacts to vibrations, a tympanum that can be seen as a mantle (“as thin as foil”). But we should not really say “he,” for there is no character left here, no human or animal, only the experience of an inside and an outside, and a non-belonging to either side. No character left here, only a filter.

The oyster does not resolve the problem of the inside and the outside either; rather, it exasperates it by making it visible. Through its baroqueness, the architecture of the façade protects the formless fulcrum. The outward coarseness is simply a series of complex folds generating the façade of the shell. But just as each façade is different, every oyster differs from the next. The notion of difference is essential here:

Difference is the alpha and omega of the universe; everything begins with difference, with the elements whose innate diversity (which various reasons make probable) can in my view be the only justification of their multiplicity; everything ends with difference, where, in the higher phenomena of thought and history, it finally breaks free of the narrow circles in which it had bound itself, namely the atomic vortex and the vital vortex, and transforming the very obstacle it faced into a fulcrum, surpasses and transfigures itself.⁴

Obstacle becoming a prop; a hinge that makes action possible (e.g. a joint in a bird’s wing, a lever for a boat’s oar).

This passage can itself be seen as a thought-oyster: an insular wall with enormous richness at its core. It tells us that difference is like an oyster: a filtering machine that turns the obstacle (the narrow circles of mechanized sameness) into a central support of its own transformation. Difference always overcomes itself. This is its law of spontaneity, both a rule and improvisation. Written 200 years earlier than the above passage, article 9 of Leibniz’s “Monadology” proposes an identical idea:

17th century thought, forever
co-present, eternal.

Each monad, indeed, must be different from every other. For there are never in nature two beings which are exactly alike, and in which it is not possible to find a difference either internal or based on an intrinsic principle.⁵

So it is with each oyster we take into our hand. It is born out of endless differentiation of itself.

The Contra Mundum Press Agrodolce Series

Agrodolce, the sweet & sour, two opposite elements that create a tangy contrast, evoke the agon, Innigkeit, the coincidentia oppositorum, unsuspected & surprising amalgamations. Spurred by this, one thinks of the two primary opposing elements of the universe, as conceived by Empedocles: love and strife. The philosopher that hails out of Akragas (Agrigento), Sicilia, the surrogate birthplace of philosophy, the philosopher's true home. Separate from any mainland, separate from nationalism. A culture born of centuries & centuries of amalgamations. More exigently, its mythic site is Mt. Etna, the volcano that, as legend has it, Empedocles leapt into. Etna, the agricultural home of apiaries, vineyards, olive and citrus groves, pistachio and hazel trees, wild herbs and far more. In erupting over 12 times a year, the landscape of Etna is one that undergoes continual metamorphosis, with eternally-evolving soil comprised of basalt, pumice, and ash. The Agrodolce Series, a source of unorthodox books on food.

CONTRA MUNDUM PRESS

Dedicated to the value & the indispensable importance of the individual voice, to works that test the boundaries of thought & experience.

The primary aim of Contra Mundum is to publish translations of writers who in their use of form and style are à rebours, or who deviate significantly from more programmatic & spurious forms of experimentation. Such writing attests to the volatile nature of modernism. Our preference is for works that have not yet been translated into English, are out of print, or are poorly translated, for writers whose thinking & aesthetics are in opposition to timely or mainstream currents of thought, value systems, or moralities. We also reprint obscure and out-of-print works we consider significant but which have been forgotten, neglected, or overshadowed.

There are many works of fundamental significance to Weltliteratur (& Weltkultur) that still remain in relative oblivion, works that alter and disrupt standard circuits of thought — these warrant being encountered by the world at large. It is our aim to render them more visible.
